Jeweler Here Is Quartz Time Grad

A. G. Gaines of Gaines Jewelers, 20 Main St., Appomattox, has completed a professional course in quartz-based timekeeping conducted by Bulova Watch Company, the largest American-owned watch company. The intensive program is designed for the watch technician who handles quartz-based wristwatches that use a tiny bar of quartz crystal that keeps time by vibrating 32,768 times a second.

"These are the finest type of quartz watches," Mr. Gaines said, "that offer the consuemr an in-use accuracy to witnin 60; seconds a year. Basically, there are two types of quartz watches: the quartz analog watch with a dial with hands; and the solid-state watch with digital readout.

Know-How Needed

"Last year, the great majority of solid-state digital watches were being sold by personnel who did not even know how to set a digital watch correctly," he added, "and who did not know how to change batteries. Therefore, there is a tremendous need for properly trained profesionals to serve all the members of the public who buy electronic watches."

The newest type of analog watches are Bulova Accutron stepper motor quartz watches for men and women, he noted. These are successors to the world's first electronic watch, the Accutron tuning-fork watch, introduced in the United States in 1960 when General Omar Bradley was chairman of Bulova.

Mr. Gaines pointed out that Bulova Accutron watch movements, made in the United States, are the only watch movements on the Moon. They are in timers emplaced on the Moon by the Appolo 11, 12 and 14 astronauts. Another Accutron clock, specially designed for U.S. astronaults is aboard Skylab, the world's first laboratory in space, which is in orbit around the Earth.

An idential Accutron clock is on display in the full-scale Skylab on permanent exhibition at the Smithsonian Institution's National Air & Space Museum in Washington, D.C. Another version of an Accutron timer is used aboard Nomad, the world's first computerized buoy, which broadcasts weather information from the Atlantic off Cape Hatteras, the storm center off the North Carolina coast.

Course

The new all-quartz timekeeping course for jewlers and watchmakers is conducted at locations throughout the country by teams of Bulova instructors, and involves intensive classroom instruciton on various models of stepper motor quartz watches with dials and training on solid-state watches with digital readouts. Mr. Gaines attended the course at Roanoke, Va.

He noted that Bulova offers more than 150 styles of quartz watches for men and women, more than any other company worldwide.
